

The greatest thing about America is competition. It keeps people and businesses in check and keeps them away from gouging the public. If you start to regulate who can broadcast what information, how, where and when it can be broadcast; we might as well be regressing back to royalty, dictatorships or even communism. I thought we as Americans are here to advocate freedom, competition (not monopolies) and an open market. Why don't we stop inventing new regulations, for fear of a business succeeding for once, and encourage competition. I find the traffic and weather reports on XM to be very helpful, and it is available all day and all night! I don't have to be constantly switching radio stations looking for traffic reports. This is very hazardous in rush hour, as it distracts people from driving safely. XM should be promoted and encouraged to all who use public highway to and from work. It also helps state police, DOT and highway patrol by preventing traffic build up by notifying the driver of hazards, accidents and road closures before they are stuck in it; thus making a bad situation worse and harder to control. Shame on NAB for being anti-American and trying to force out any competition.
